

Report to the U.S. Congress for the Year Ending
December 31, 2015

National Film
Preservation Foundation

Created by the U.S. Congress to Preserve America's Film Heritage

June 15, 2016

Dr. David S. Mao
Acting Librarian of Congress
Washington, D.C. 20540-1000

Dear Dr. Mao:

In accordance with The Library of Congress Sound Recording and Film Preservation Programs Reauthorization Act of 2008 (P.L. 110-336), I submit to the U.S. Congress the 2015 Report of the National Film Preservation Foundation.

Film has documented America for more than 120 years, but it is only in the last 30 that we have rallied to save it. In 1996, Congress created the NFPF to help archives, libraries, and museums to rescue this history and share it with the public. Thanks to federal funding secured through the Library of Congress, entertainment industry support, and the unwavering dedication of preservationists, there is much good news to report.

As of 2015, the NFPF programs have preserved more than 2,230 motion pictures—newsreels, actualities, cartoons, silent-era productions, avant-garde films, home movies, and other independent works that might otherwise have faded from public memory. Tremendous credit is due to the 279 cultural institutions that have tapped our programs to save culturally significant motion pictures. Once copied to film stock and safely archived, the works begin a new life through teaching, exhibition, broadcast, DVD, and the Internet.

In past reports, I've singled out international partners that have enabled the United States to bring home 211 early American films that had not been seen in decades. In 2015, we premiered six short films on the NFPF website that survived only as fragile nitrate copies abroad. Preserved in partnership with the EYE Filmmuseum Netherlands and our American partner archives, this was the first group of more than 50 films that will be saved and presented online through this collaboration. Indeed, online presentation of films preserved through NFPF programs has become a priority. In 2015, the NFPF posted links to more than 100 films now available to the public for free and presented two feature films in its online screening room.

All this has become possible thanks to the unflagging commitment of our major supporters: the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, the Cecil B. De Mille Foundation, The Film Foundation, the National Endowment for the Humanities, and the Weissman Family Foundation. I cannot close without thanking you and your marvelous staff at the Library of Congress for assisting us with our work and making it possible for the NFPF to provide crucial support to film archives throughout the nation.

Sincerely,

Jeff Lambert
Executive Director
National Film Preservation Foundation

With a federally funded preservation grant, George Eastman Museum made a 35mm blowup from a 28mm print of the film. In addition to stunning images of and from the train, the film captures the prehistoric ruins that are now the site of Montezuma Castle National Monument.

Who We Are

The National Film Preservation Foundation is the independent, nonprofit organization created by the U.S. Congress to help save America's film heritage. Working with archives and others who appreciate film, the NFPF supports activities that save films for future generations, improve film access for education and exhibition, and increase public commitment to preserving film as a cultural resource, art form, and historical record. Established in 1996, the NFPF is the charitable affiliate of the National Film Preservation Board of the Library of Congress.

In creating the National Film Preservation Foundation, the U.S. Congress put film preservation on the national agenda. The 1996 legislation laid out an innovative framework through which cultural institutions of all sizes could play their part in rescuing films important to our history. Now, 20 years later, the results speak for themselves—2,230 films saved and made available by 279 American organizations assisted through NFPF programs. Audiences across all 50 states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico see preserved films in the classroom, through exhibitions, and via DVD and the Internet. With two decades of preservation work behind us, it is worth remembering why the groundbreaking legislation that created the NFPF came about.

In 1993, the Librarian of Congress alerted Congress that motion pictures were disintegrating faster than archives could save them. The works most at risk were not the well-known entertainments or commercial blockbusters but culturally significant documentaries, silent-era works, home movies, avant-garde films, newsreels, industrials, and independent productions that were hidden away in nonprofit and public organizations across the country. These films showed an America full of energy and optimism, a land of communities and families shaped through innovation and cultural celebration. While overlooked, these movies have been safeguarded by cultural institutions throughout the nation. Thanks to this stewardship, the real-life cinema captured by individuals living in America survives to be seen again.

Unfortunately, for many years film preservation remained the purview of only the largest archives, those with the resources and knowledge to save their historical holdings. So Congress asked the Library and its National Film Preservation Board to figure out a more inclusive approach. From their work grew a new public-private collaboration, the National Film Preservation Foundation. Charged with advancing the “preservation and accessibility of the nation’s film heritage,” the NFPF received federal matching funds through the Library of Congress to preserve American films here and abroad and to serve as an incentive for donors. Congress has since increased the NFPF’s authorization twice, in 2005 and in 2008.

Encouraged by this legislative action, organizations once considered too small to take on preservation projects have begun saving films and sharing them with the public. Film preservation has taken root across the nation, and as digital access becomes easier, more and more preserved films are presented online, expanding access for research, teaching, and sheer enjoyment by film and history buffs.

In 2015, sixty-four films were selected for preservation through NFPF grants. Judging by the titles being saved, the congressional commitment to expanding the reach of film preservation continues to bear fruit. Among the films slated for preservation are Ambassadors in Levis (ca. 1970), about the Tucson Arizona Boys Chorus; corporate films about the Golden State Mutual Life Insurance Company, for many years the only African American-owned corporation in California; the first student works by animator Frank Mouris, whose Frank Film won the Oscar for best animated short film in 1974; Jud Yalkut’s John Cage Mushroom Hunting in Stony Point (1972–73); two mid-century films sponsored by the Montana Aeronautics Commission; and home movies of President Herbert Hoover and his family, the 1944 Republican National Convention, Winston Churchill in Cuba, and the Santa Fe Fiesta.

NFPF grants went to 35 archives, historical societies, libraries, and museums of varying sizes, geographic areas, and specializations. Most awards were modest—between $3,000 and $10,000; all were matched by staff time and other costs contributed by recipients; larger projects required a 20 percent organizational match. When projects are completed, institutions store the new preservation masters under cool-and-dry archival conditions and provide viewing copies for study and exhibition. Online presentation is highly encouraged, and hundreds of films preserved through the program have made their way online thanks to public service-minded organizations. Links to these films can be found on the NFPF website, which has become a clearinghouse for access to these preserved gems.

Although federal dollars fuel the NFPF grants, we sustain operations through other sources. Dedicated contributors—the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, the Cecil B. De Mille Foundation, the Marmor Foundation, the James and Theodore Pedas Family Foundation, the Weissman Family Foundation, Combined Federal Campaign donors, and many more—fund our daily work. A special thanks goes to The Film Foundation, which has supported us since the very beginning. More than a decade ago, it also founded with the NFPF the Avant-Garde Masters grants, through which works by 61 film artists have been saved and returned to the big screen or the gallery wall.

A community of archivists, scholars, technical experts, and donors has stepped up to assist the NFPF in accomplishing the work that Congress laid out in the legislative framework. Without their volunteer efforts and enthusiasm, the NFPF would not survive.

On the Screen

Faces and Fortunes (1960), preserved by Chicago Film Archives.

This sponsored film about corporate branding, made by Chicago's Goldsholl Design Associates for Kimberly-Clark, uses animation and collage to demonstrate the value of memorable logos and slogans. It screened at the Exploratorium in San Francisco in September as part of "Scintillating 16mm," a presentation of prints preserved by the NFPF.

While online access is convenient and incredibly useful for repeat viewing and study, many films still work best projected on the big screen. Films preserved through NFPF programs continue to screen at film festivals and cinematheques around the world. In 2015 the most prestigious silent film festival in the world, Le Giornate del Cinema Muto, in Pordenone, Italy, featured five films preserved with NFPF support. NFPF-supported films also screened at the Cinecon Classic Film Festival in Los Angeles and the San Francisco Silent Film Festival, among many other venues.

Production shot of Jessie Maple directing her feature film Twice as Nice (1989), which tells the story of twin-sister basketball stars competing for a single spot in the NBA draft. The Black Film Center/Archive at Indiana University will preserve the film with a 2015 grant. Maple was the first African American woman admitted to the New York camera operators union and worked on documentaries with her husband before producing her first fiction feature, Will, in 1981.

Augmenting Online Access

Catskill Honeymoon (1950), preserved by Southern Methodist University and viewable on the NFPF website.

Movies of Local People: Spindale (1937), preserved by Duke University and viewable on the NFPF website.

A Regular Bouquet: Mississippi Summer (1964), preserved by Washington University in St. Louis and viewable on the NFPF website.

In 2015 the NFPF launched Access Alley, a blog spotlighting films being streamed on the NFPF site and sharing news about our grants and programs. In tandem, the NFPF expanded the scope of films made available on our website by uploading works preserved through the grant programs. All are accompanied by contextualizing program notes and information on the preservation process undertaken to save the film. The blog also allows us to highlight the innovative work being done by organizations that have received support and shine a light on films that might go under the radar. Bright spots of 2015 were:

Inventive public presentations. Duke University launched a website dedicated to the work of itinerant filmmaker H. Lee Waters. Between 1936 and 1942 Waters filmed more than 118 small communities in the Carolinas, Virginia, and Tennessee for his series Movies of Local People. By collaborating with local movie theaters to screen his films, he enabled everyday people to see themselves on the big screen. NFPF grants helped preserve more than 40 of Waters' town portraits, all of which are now viewable online.

Catskill Honeymoon* (1950). Preserved by Southern Methodist University, this Yiddish American musical made its online debut on our website. Directed by Josef Berne, it tells the story of a Jewish couple celebrating their 50th anniversary at the Young's Gap Hotel in the Catskills, where they are treated to a stage show replete with Borscht Belt stalwarts.

Technicolor's 100th anniversary. In celebration, we presented on our website two films made using the beautiful process: Mrs. Mortimer Jones Prepares "Dinner for Eight" (1934), commissioned by Southern California Edison and the second live-action short film to be released in three-strip Technicolor; and The Story of Creative Capital (1957), an animated film made for the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and featuring a soundtrack by Les Baxter. The films were preserved respectively by the Huntington Library and the Hagley Museum and Library.

Spotlight on archives. One of 279 organizations served by our grant programs, the Chicago Film Archives celebrated its 10th anniversary in 2015 and has made more than 15 films preserved with NFPF support viewable online.

A Regular Bouquet: Mississippi Summer* (1964). Actor Richard Beymer's documentary of the Freedom Summer campaign of 1964 was preserved by Washington University in St. Louis with an NFPF grant and made available for viewing on our website. With a 16mm Bolex camera Beymer recorded the African American community as his fellow activists and volunteers worked to register black voters and provide educational instruction to children.

Preserved films around the Web. Our website now links to NFPF-funded films viewable around the Web, such as New York Public Library's presentation of Roaches' Lullaby (1973), Folkstreams' Welcome to Spivey's Corner (1978), and San Francisco Media Archive's Blackie the Wonder Horse Swims the Golden Gate (1938).

To assist viewers searching for films that might be on the NFPF site, we partnered with the Motion Picture Association of America's website Where To Watch to make sure all available films are cataloged there. The site is a handy portal pointing people to legal copies of films, and the NFPF is proud to be included.

Along with the blog came an expansion of our social media presence. The NFPF inaugurated a Twitter account to accompany its Facebook page. All of these work in tandem to spread the word about the importance of film preservation and alert the public that many of the films saved through NFPF funding are available for online viewing.

International Cooperation

The NFPF continues its partnership with EYE Filmmuseum in the Netherlands. With the assistance of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, the Library of Congress, the Smithsonian's National Museum of American History, and the Oregon Historical Society, we are preserving more than 50 titles from EYE's American film collection. The project was announced in March 2014, and the first six films preserved were made available online in October, complete with new music and program notes. Among them are Cowboy Jazz (1920), depicting Tex Austin's rodeo show in Chicago's Grant Park in July 1920, with appearances by Ruth Roach, Foghorn Clancy, and "Yiddish Cowboy" Dizzy Izzy Broad; and Clarence Cheats at Croquet (1915), a comedy from the Thanhouser Film Corporation involving a jealous lover with no sense of fair play. Its preservation was co-funded by Thanhouser Company Film Preservation, which also commissioned the new music. Both films were preserved through the Library of Congress. Also now available online are The Darling of the C.S.A. (1912), the tale of a cross-dressing spy played by Anna Q. Nilsson; Koko's Queen (1926), a deliciously twisted cartoon from the Fleischer brothers; and the stop-motion animation Fifty Million Years Ago (1925), an introduction to the theory of evolution that employs charming model dinosaurs. Preservation of these three films was supervised by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. More films from this exciting project will debut on the NFPF website in 2016.

Thanks to Dr. James H. Billington

On September 30, 2015, Dr. James H. Billington retired from his position as Librarian of Congress. Appointed by President Ronald Reagan in 1987, Billington led the Library of Congress into the digital age and expanded the scope of its operations. A scholar of Russian culture, he was also a film lover. Under his watch the National Film Preservation Board was created in 1988: It named 650 films to the National Film Registry before his departure and paved the way to the formation of the NFPF in 1996. In 2007 the Librarian oversaw the construction of the National Audio-Visual Conservation Center in Culpeper, Virginia. Funded by the Packard Humanities Institute with the support of Congress, the 45-acre site houses millions of feet of film and other audiovisual material—a monument to American history and innovation.

Remembering Roger Mayer

In 2015 the National Film Preservation Foundation mourned the loss of our founding board chair Roger Mayer. His advocacy and passion for film preservation were inspirational and instrumental in bringing attention to the cause. From the Hollywood masterpieces he helped save while at MGM to the home movies he heralded on behalf of the NFPF, Roger saw film as vital history. His strength and conviction were balanced by his sense of humor and humility. We will strive to honor his memory through our continued dedication to saving America's film heritage and bringing these precious images to new audiences.

"The film preservation community has lost a beloved friend," wrote fellow NFPF and NFPB member Martin Scorsese. "Throughout his successful career in the industry, Roger consistently put the care and preservation of collections at the forefront. He was absolutely key in helping the Library of Congress establish the National Film Preservation Foundation in 1996 and over the years he gave tirelessly of his time and expertise. Because of his leadership and guidance, the NFPF has been incredibly effective, preserving thousands of orphan films from every state in the U.S. I'm deeply saddened at the passing of Roger, for whom I had an enormous amount of respect, affection, and admiration. To say that he will be sorely missed is an understatement. My heart goes out to his family and everyone in the film community whose lives he indelibly touched."

Robert Rehme presents Roger Mayer with the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences' founding donation to the NFPF in 1997.

In 2005 Roger Mayer was recognized by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences with the Jean Hersholt Humanitarian Award for his leadership of the film preservation movement.

Appendix Two: Financial Statements

Cupid in Quarantine (1918), a romantic comedy returned from EYE Filmmuseum that will be preserved with money raised in 2015 by “For the Love of Film: The Film Preservation Blogathon.”

The following tables, extracted from the financial statements audited by Allan Liu, CPA, show the financial position of the NFPF as of December 31, 2015.

These statements report several significant program developments. In 2015, the NFPF awarded $387,460 in preservation grants to 35 institutions. This amount includes The Film Foundation’s generous underwriting of the Avant-Garde Masters grants. The federal funds were authorized by The Library of Congress Sound Recording and Film Preservation Programs Reauthorization Act of 2008 and appropriated through the Library of Congress. From the $530,000 received from the Library for preservation activities, $188,330 was temporarily restricted for the preservation of films repatriated from abroad.

In 2015, we expended $90,620 to preserve films repatriated from Eye Filmmuseum. Through generous support from the National Endowment for the Humanities the nonfiction films from EYE will be preserved and presented online with new music and scholarly notes; fiction films will be presented with new music thanks to a generous award from the National Film Preservation Board and the Council on Library and Information Resources. In May the NFPF debuted its blog and expanded online access.

This past year, 92 percent of NFPF expenses were program related; administration and development accounted for 8 percent of the total expenses. The NFPF delivered its services within budget and on schedule with a staff of four. As of December 31, 2015, the NFPF has advanced film preservation projects in 279 nonprofit and public organizations across all 50 states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico and funded the preservation of 2,230 films.
